

English E/III-A Reading Instruction and Practice Activities

Learning New Vocabulary: Building your base

Building a strong basic vocabulary is the basis of being able to function in a second language. Astonishingly, in English, knowing just 2,000 words/phrases is enough to enable you to read fiction effectively and to be able to begin reading academic or "specialist" writing.

However, to "know" means more than just recognizing the word or phrase immediately. To really know the meaning of a word or phrase, you must be able to:

- a. use it
- b. recognize and use its many forms
- c. find its exact meaning in a dictionary
- d. use it in different situations
- e. understand all the "nuances" of its meaning

Having a basic understanding of the word is very useful in helping to remember a word; BUT IT IS NOT ENOUGH. To really learn a word you also need to:

- a. check its meaning in a dictionary
- b. find its Japanese equivalent
- c. check its pronunciation
- d. use it in your own sentences
- e. read it in a variety of contexts
- f. explore its use in idioms
- g. find out its different derivatives
- h. make word cards and review them regularly,
- i. etc. . .

This is why your Personal Dictionary is so important because for each entry in your PLD, you should do all of these things. Also, your PLD shouldn't just be for "new" words. You should try including ANY and ALL words or phrases you feel are important to know or learn. Once you have entered these important words and phrases in your PD, you should also try to review them as often as possible. If you don't, you will forget them very, very quickly
